

Abstract

In a intake system of a combustion engine, surface irregularities in the form of raised parts (8) or depressions (7) are created, at pre-determined points, in the wall surfaces of a suction pipe or the surfaces of a flap arranged in such a suction pipe, in order to avoid burbling and eddying in these areas.